

I would like to request that the FCC not expand the service of the low power FM radio stations. I listen to KLOVE on three different stations in Colorado. The choices I have for radio stations in the area that I live and work in are few and other than KLOVE, not appealing to me.

I live in Leadville, Co., work in Dillon, Co. and frequently drive to Denver, Co. This is a listener supported station and has many listeners not only in Colorado, but throughout the country.

I hear the Public Radio stations as well but do not feel they do as much for the community, as a whole, as does a station/company like KLOVE. This radio station works with many communities as a resource for assistance and does so much more than just play music.

If the LPFM is expanded, KLOVE and it's services would be lost. That would be tragic to the communities that it truly serves across the country. Communities that are willing to pay for these services by supporting the station.

It's more than just music. I like knowing that I will not hear offensive language on this station and that it is "safe" for all listeners. I occassionally lose the station as I'm driving and pick up a local rock station. It is appauling to me what is allowed to be broadcasted. I know that KLOVE and other radio station's that use this format will be a positive influence on those that listen verses sexual induendos and off color jokes that the D.J.'s feel are funny.

Please contact me if I can or should do more. I will gladly do so.

Sincerely,
Lisa Cloud
